WE PACIFISTS?

Rabbi Maurice N. Eisendrath

I believe that it was Maurice Samuel who, in his rather vitriolic "You Gentiles", established the elaborate thesis that Jew and gentile differ essentially in their attitude toward war. The gentile, he averred, being the great sportsman, the gambler, the reckless and undaunted follower of fun and frolic, is by nature militaristic, loves the pomp and ceremony of battle, wages wars with impunity, and thus curses the human race. The Jew, on the contrary, being innately serious and contemplative, the consecrated high priest of learning and religion, is primarily pacific, yearns for the tranquility and calm of peace, dreams of a Messianic Era when cannon and shell will be forever silenced, and thus "in him all the nations of the earth are blessed". The gentile, or more politely, the 'goy', can thus be symbolized by tiger or lion; the Jew, by lamb or dove.

Ludwig Lewishon carries this fantastic contrast even farther. There is much of it in "Mid-Channel" but more particularly it is to be found in his contribution, "The Pagan in the Heart" contained in a recent symposium of sermons entitled, "If I could Preach Just Once." And if Lewisohn 'could preach just once' he would "tell the world" blatantly and dogmatically that Jew and gentile are essentially and inherently different beings, particularly because of their respective attitudes toward War and Peace. This he accomplishes by contrasting the diametrically opposed personalities of Moses Levy and John Smith. Moses Levy, writes Lewisohn, "despises all values except moral and intellectual values—believes in peace—and always has the shrewdest suspicions that the quarrels he is asked to enter are not his quarrels or those of any of his ordinary fellowmen at all—he loathes the thought of hurt, of death, of war, of confusion—he loves life and peace, food and drink, music and sunshine—he wants literally and passionately to be left in peace in order to pursue the goods which seem to him the true goods of human life: love, children, knowledge, charity, good health, and old age."

But not so the muchly despised John Smith, into whose very bone and marrow "belligerency is bred—but never a belligerency for his minimum rights to freedom, love, play, and sunlight, but belligerency only for a flag, a figment, a vision of fancied danger and unnecessary solidarity." Not so John Smith, "the pagan hearted," the avatar of "force, honor, prestige, and the fatherland"—all the Quakers, the Anatole Frances, the Romain Rollands notwithstanding.

I have never concurred in the view either of the mighty Maurice or of the lusty Ludwig. I have never felt that the Jew was racially, innately, by nature, pacific. History is too replete with his own jingoisms, his own merciless persecutions of pacifistic prophets, of his own "pseudo-knightly ideals and gestures" to grant such an outlandish thesis. The records of the late war, wherein thousands of Moses Levys, despite the contentions of Lewisohn, actually did "thrill to the flutter of the flag," prove otherwise. The Jew has always been "patriotic and loyal" as his defenders raucously prate; loyal and patriotic, however, to his militaristic 'Vaterland' rather than to his pacific ideals. A great peace-loving tradition, the Jew may have, but to argue that it is inherently and uniquely his own is to be utterly blind to the evidence of the past.

And of the present too, for the most pointed refutation of this chauvinistic thesis is to be found in the reaction to the recent most lamentable situation in Palestine. Granted that, in the main, the Jew has not sought to slay every Arab in sight. Neither has the humble individual of any nation been himself zealous for war, regardless of the provocation. The very fact, however, that Jewish blood ran so tempestuous and so hot, that the cry went up to mobilize a Jewish army, to wreak primeval vengeance on the Arab, to "rally to a new determinism to complete the age-long dream by resorting to arms, if necessary" this fact in itself is a potent negation of our innate Jewish pacifism. Our whole reaction has been military. Palestine must be defended at the point of the bayonet, if not by ourselves then by Great Britain, at least. In other words, Moses Levy takes his militarism vicariously, by sending John Smith to the front. The Arab must be kept in his place—whether he likes it or not—with battleship and fortress; "Palestine must yet be more Jewish, than England is English." So has run the bulk of comment on the Palestinian situation. But what earthly use, I ask, is Palestine, its University, its Tel-a-Vivs, its Wailing Walls, if it fails to exemplify the fundamental Hebraic ideal of peace? Not by nature are we pacific, but we have a great opportunity to demonstrate to the world our traditional idealism, by dwelling together with the Arab and Christian in harmony and peace.

As to how this may be achieved, I admit the complexity of the problem. But this much I know: the problem can never be solved by appeal to arms. Idealistically, to be sure not; nor even practically. The vast hordes of Arabs that swarm the desert wastes are too race conscious for that. Only greater and world tottering difficulties might ensue. And it is disheartening indeed to read of Rabbis, who so bitterly inveigh against American Dollar Diplomacy, staunchly maintaining that "one of the gravest perils to the future of Palestine lies in the effect the situation will have upon the spending of Jewish money and the investment of capital. Unless Jewish works are protected, capital will not be expended. Capital follows favorable political conditions; where security is doubtful, bankers will not advance loans or seek for dividends." Such are the effects then of Jewish chauvinism and Jewish nationalism. Soldiers, cannon, bayonets, and military law, however, will not permanently remedy the situation. It were well that we who, throughout the ages, have flaunted at our adversaries the prophetic dictum, "Not by might, nor by power, but by My spirit" heed the selfsame injunction.

The thoughtful Observer in the Toronto Daily Star might aptly be quoted: "How immeasurable may be the service to the world when the Jews, returning to Palestine, not only with the rich gifts of western civilization, but with a loftier Judaism than of old, shall reawaken to a nobler life, the slumbering soul of their Arab fellow-countryman."

By all means let our moneys flow bounteously for relief: for medicine, clothing, and food—and we might also add for the education of the Arab, by example rather than by precept, in the deeper connotation of Zionism—but not one cent for shot and shell, that we might be in fact, rather than in mere theory, a nation of Moses Levys, of peace loving 'Koharim', pacific priests.

TO OPEN STUDIO

Miss May Lightstone was awarded a diploma by the Union Professionnelle des Maitres du Chant Francais, after spending a year in France, studying with her internationally known sister, Madame Pauline Donalda, famous teacher of singing and former opera star. Miss May Lightstone, who has herself a warm dramatic soprano voice, was exceptionally well received in music centres in Paris. Special mention of her voice was made in "Figaro" and other French journals where she was acclaimed as the possessor of a warm rich dramatic voice, of great promise.

The diploma awarded by the Union Professionnelle des Maitres du Chant Francais, is seldom awarded to any but inhabitants of France, yet Miss Lightstone passed the requirements with great distinction. The diploma allows her to teach in France and to appear in concert.

Miss May Lightstone will teach the Italian method, which her sister Madame Pauline Donalda, has followed with such great success in her teaching career in France. Her pupil, Miss Rose Mostova has been engaged to sing in opera at Cannes next season. Another pupil Miss R. Kanter will appear in opera at Algiers. Miss May Lightstone will specialize in voice production and interpretation for which she is particularly well adapted.

Memorial Plan in Jewish Campaign

The executives in charge of the Jewish Hospital campaign, which opens in Montreal and throughout the Province on Sunday, with the object of raising a minimum of $600,000, have worked out a plan whereby individuals, families, business firms and corporations may unite in honoring, in perpetuity, the names of relatives, friends or officials. This has been called a "memorial plan" under which the name of every worker and every contributor will be included in "The Golden Book" which will be a lasting record of all who helped in Jewry's greatest task in this city.

The names of those who subscribe $500 and upwards will be inscribed on bronze tablets while those who give $100 and over will receive a "tribute certificate" described as a "tribute everlasting" and a treasured reminder of the hospital campaign.

The memorial plan however also makes provision whereby subscribers of stipulated sums may have bronze tablets placed over certain sections of the hospital indicating that they are permanent memorials.

Under this plan, a subscription of $100,000 will enable the donor to designate the maternity department and public service department as a memorial, or a similar amount will cover the cost of the nurses' section for 50 graduates and training nurses. A subscriber of $50,000 can have his name allied with the provision of the out-patient and social service department, while $45,000 will cover the operating department.

The laboratory and general research department, the X-ray department, the children's department, the boiler room, including ventilating and air washing plant are included in the $25,000 group but the first named may be covered by a subscription as high as $50,000 depending on the completeness of equipment.

The unit price of the laundry is $15,000, and of the refrigerating plant, $15,000; the lobby, $20,000; two passenger elevators, $10,000 each; two major operating rooms, $10,000 each; the meat kitchen, $10,000; the board of directors' room, $10,000; ambulance, $10,000; sterilizing room, $7,500; semi-private rooms, two beds, $6,000; three isolation rooms, $5,000 each; three solariums, $5,000 each; minor operating room, $5,000; milk and butter kitchen, staff dining room, doctors' library, pharmacy and 30 private rooms, all at $5,000 each; nurses' workroom and semi-private beds (40), $3,000 each.

For a subscription of $2,500, the donor may choose any of the following as a permanent memorial: Diet kitchens (three); five waiting rooms, graduate nurses' sitting room, undergraduate nurses' sitting room, doctors' consulting and lounge room, information office or admitting office; while a subscription of $2,000 covers the interne's sitting room or the plaster cast and fracture room.

Other available memorials in the $1,500 group are as follows: Service elevator, interne's living rooms (2), resident physician's room, resident surgeon's room, nurses' rest rooms (3), nurses' stations (3), utility rooms (3), ward laboratories (3), anaesthesia rooms (2) supervisor's office, doctors' dressing rooms (2), help's dining room, male superintendent's office, female superintendent's office, accounting office and public wards (50).

Eight private rooms are listed in the $5,000 group, an isolation room is also covered at $5,000, while subscribers of $3,000 can be allied with the provision of a semi-private room. Twenty bassinettes, in pairs, are included at $1,500 per pair, while semi-private rooms with two beds, are on the list at $6,000.

The announcement of this memorial plan has aroused considerable interest and it is expected that it will touch a responsive chord in those who wish to perpetuate the memory of a relative, a friend or an official.

SIR J. MARTIN-HARVEY WILL PLAY GREAT ROLE LAST TIME IN MONTREAL

"The Only Way," the dramatized version of Dickens' thrilling, adventurous story of an incident of the "Terror" in France, will be played here at His Majesty's theatre on Monday, Sept. 23, for one week, for the last time, in fulfilment of a promise made by Sir John Martin Harvey to present it here again before he retires for good from the role of Sidney Carton. The great English actor has chosen several new plays for his Canadian tour, but has been compelled to go again to the guillotine in this, the greatest of his many successes, by the insistent demand from managers along his entire itinerary. On his return across Canada Sir John will be seen in new roles, and Sidney Carton will have passed from the stage, to remain secure in his niche in stageland's hall of fame.

The story of "The Only Way" has always held the greatest interest to young and old alike, for its deals with a period in the history of the French Revolution when rivers of blood ran in the streets of Paris and the flower of the nobility of la Belle France went stoically or gaily to meet death under the slanted knife. The gift of Sidney Carton to a world which had given him much and gained little from him is one of the finest things in literature or drama, and as played by Sir John Martin Harvey its gains realism that moves an audience to its depths. The final speech of the gay Carton when he faces the stern reality of the guillotine is rendered by Sir John in an unforgettable way. Those who have never seen him in this character should make arrangements early to secure seats, for Sir John is determined to retire "The Only Way" from his repertory this season.

As usual, he brings here his regular strong company, and intends to make his visit this season one of his biggest. For that reason he has secured the right to two new plays that will take high place in the season's presentations. "Rosemary" and "The Lowland Wolf," in which he will be seen here later on.

First Outremont Synagogue Opened

Dedication of the Beth David Synagogue in its new quarters at the corner of St. Joseph Boulevard and Nelson Avenue Sunday afternoon marked the official opening of the first Jewish synagogue in the city of Outremont. Mayor Joseph Beaubien and several members of the council, Aldermen Sayer, Pitt, Bourassa, and Ethier, expressed the goodwill of the community.

Rabbinical representatives of Montreal Jewry, who spoke were: Rabbi H. Cohen, Rabbi S. Herschorn, Rabbi H. Abramowitz, and Cantor Rev. A. Schlepack, others were members of the Legislature, including Joseph Cohen, K.C., and Peter Bercovitch, K.C., and Rev. J. R. Dobson, pastor of the St. Giles' Presbyterian Church, which was transformed into a synagogue: Mayor Joseph Beaubien, on behalf of the city of Outremont; and Michael Ruckenstein, president, Manuel A. Mendell, honorary secretary, and Jacob Manolson, one of the founders.

Mayor Beaubien complimented Rabbi Herschorn on his dedication address and referred to his statement that it was neither the size nor the luxury of temples that measured the height and depth of religion. He stated that religion was looked upon more or less indifferently by the world of today and that therefore there was a slight possibility of men's forgetting its basic principles. In days of old, he continued, persecution meant bigotry but bigotry in turn meant conviction. He expressed the hope that all nations would practice the immortal ideals of religion, for if they ceased to do so, he said, spiritually the world would retrogress centuries to an age of intolerance, instead of tolerance with which it now regards the devotions of its many nationalities. He congratulated the congregation on its efforts in procuring such a fine place of worship as the previous St. Giles' Presbyterian Church.

"What a peculiar people we are, what a strange history and destiny has been our lot since Creation," declared Joseph Cohen, K.C., in his address. "Whether we are in our national homeland or an adopted country, we attempt to be a model to the people among whom we live and thus fulfill our destiny. These walls, benches, stones and pillars are beautiful but let us not forget that these alone do not constitute a sacred edifice. To be properly Jewish a holy spirit must pervade its very atmosphere to make its walls live and pulsate with wholesome energy. Even while our service is being held, church bells are tolling within a stone's throw and stones are not cast upon us. The Jewish synagogue is primarily a place of worship to God but it must have another thought, that of a communal centre to radiate energy and enthusiasm. Jews are essentially an integral part of the community in which they live and by their honesty of purpose endeavor to prove their worth. I would ask the mayor, the aldermen, and all other non-Jews not only to express their goodwill and greetings in the synagogue but to carry on the principle of good fellowship and tolerance by bringing into their offices, churches, and personal contacts the appreciation that they manifest on special occasions.

Peter Bercovitch, K.C., remarked that Judaism was the fountain of all good living and virtues. If Christians would attend their services, he declared, they would learn more of the good qualities of the Jews and thus put an end to petty differences that continually crop up between Jews and non-Jews.

Rabbi Herschorn, officiating rabbi of the congregation, in his dedication address, deplored the modern tendency to fall away from religion. Comparing present day religion with its past glory, he declared that what they have gained in the outward appearance of their synagogues or churches, they have lost in spiritual vitality and power.

Manuel A. Mendell, honorary secretary, traced the growth of the congregation from a small house on Lagauchetiere Street forty-two years ago to larger premises on Fortification Lane, Notre Dame Street near Place d'Armes, and then to the Spanish and Portuguese headquarters on Chenneville street in 1894. For the past thirty-five years the congregation had been holding regular services there, but within the past ten years it found increasing difficulty in providing suitable accommodation for its members.

The traditional placing of the scrolls in the ark formed part of the programme. Sixteen members marched with the holy parchments to the accompaniment of Ledovid Mizmur. Cantor Rev. A. Schlepack led the choir and Prof. I. Rosemarin was organ accompanist.

Rabbi H. Abramowitz said the prayer for His Majesty King George V, the Royal Family, and the Government of Canada, and the closing benediction. A reception followed the official dedication proceedings. I. Pupliger was chairman.

NEW INVESTMENT OFFICE

Rountree & Company, the investment securities firm which opened offices recently at 1174 Phillips Place, are paying particular attention to the oil situation in Canada at the present time.

The opinion expressed by Rountree & Company is that the future of oil in this country seems to be a very bright one and all eyes are turned on the new fields being opened up in Alberta. One of the really promising ones is Horburg which is situated on the Rocky Mountain House District and upon the North Saskatchewan River area where some big developments are promised in a very short time. Large sections have been investigated and the geological report is a decidedly satisfactory one.

One of the country's most prominent geologists, Joseph H. Sinclair, M.Sc., in his report stresses the favorable structural conditions in this area and then goes on to say:

"The object of a geologist's studies is to recommend as to the finding of petroleum in commercial quantities. We have borne this in mind continually. Throughout the world disseminated petroleum is well nigh universal; in Alberta it is widespread. Accumulations, however, are rare. The formation of bitumen is a general process. Wherever sediments are laid down enclosing either animal or vegetable matter, there bitumens may be produced. To the undersigned the important question is not where the disseminated petroleum occurs, but where could it be concentrated. Our conclusion is that structural conditions are all important."

Mr. Sinclair adds that nowhere in Alberta are conditions in this connection more favorable.

In regard to the market on mining, Rountree & Company believe it is very selective. They do not look for a movement as a group, but several individual movements are pending and may start at any time now. They advise their clients to use great care in placing commitments, giving consideration not only to market conditions in general but to weigh each individual security separately on its known value, prospects, management, development, etc.

The general impression received on visiting the offices of Rountree & Company is one of optimism as to the future of the mines and oils, particularly the latter and if their expectations are fulfilled decidedly gratifying demonstration in our markets during the coming months will be witnessed.

Louis Marshall Servant of His People

The measure of Louis Marshall's success as a lawyer, philanthropist, statesman, champion of the Jewish race and American citizen was demonstrated on his seventieth birthday, Dec. 14, 1928, when an address of felicitation signed by more than 8,000 persons in many parts of the world testified to his character and accomplishments.

Louis Marshall was born at Syracuse, N. Y., December 14, 1856. His parents were immigrants from Bavaria. After a hard struggle for several years his father started a small business in hides and furs. Mr. Marshall was the oldest of six children, and began working for his father at the age of 8, keeping books and performing the duties of a porter. His mother was a self-educated woman, who never learned to speak English but knew three other languages, which she helped to teach her son. At the age of 10 he made up his mind to be a lawyer.

"Books attracted me early," he said in explaining how he became a lawyer. "I read everything within reach. At 12 I had joined a debating club. We discussed the Constitution, the Declaration and the founding of the nation. Those debates led me to read a great deal about my country. I became engrossed in the creation of this new nation; was eager to learn how its laws had been drawn and its institutions founded. Then I began to talk about them. I suppose it was a natural transition from the debating club to the bar."

Mr. Marshall's general education was largely gained outside of school. Nevertheless, besides English, he learned to speak and write accurately French, German, Italian and Spanish, to master Latin and Greek; and in addition he was a thorough Hebrew scholar and an expert in Yiddish.

After leaving high school in Syracuse he became a student in the Columbia University Law School, from which he was graduated in 1876, completing the two-year course in one year. Among his fellow students were Samuel Untermyer, De Lancey Nicoll, Judge Samson Lachman and Perry Belmont. After graduation he entered a law office in Syracuse as a clerk, and when he became 21 was admitted to the bar.

One of the lawyers who examined Mr. Marshall for the bar was the late William C. Ruger. He was so impressed with the young candidate that he offered him a position and very soon made him a partner. A few years later Mr. Ruger was appointed Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals, and the law firm became Jenney, Brooks & Marshall. Mr. Marshall was engaged in active practice at Syracuse until 1894, when he came to New York to become a member of the firm of Guggenheimer, Untermyer & Marshall, with which he remained actively connected until his death.

As a lawyer Mr. Marshall was identified particularly with cases involving constitutional questions and problems of statutory construction, although his practice as a whole embraced every type of case. He was said to have argued almost as many cases in the highest courts of this State and in the United States Supreme Court as any other lawyer in the country. But the round of everyday legal affairs never diverted attention from his first inspiration: the American Constitution and the State Constitutions.

Mr. Marshall served in three New York State Constitutional Conventions, taking an active and prominent part in them. In the course of his practice he argued the constitutionality of bonus laws, inheritance tax laws, compensation laws, special franchise tax, the tax on stock transfers, alien immigration laws and many international cases. He was repeatedly selected by successive Governors to act as a member of important State commissions charged with the duty of investigating men or social conditions.

In recent years his most prominent cases have been those in which he carried on the legal proceedings which defeated Mayor Hylan's plan of a city-run bus system; argued against the home rule legislation for New York City; prevented the proposed referendum on a five-cent subway fare going before voters in 1925, and successfully defended ticket speculators by winning a United States Supreme Court decision which held the State price-fixing law unconstitutional.

The real purpose of Mr. Marshall's life, however, and the activities for which he will be longest remembered, concern his efforts to guard and promote the welfare of his race in every part of the globe. Wherever Jews have been the object of persecution, wherever their rights have been infringed upon and wherever a Jew or group of Jews needed help Mr. Marshall was in the thick of things as their indefatigable champion.

While the rights of Jews were always paramount in his consideration, Mr. Marshall was incidentally the champion of every minority group

American rights were being trampled [illegible]. He espoused the cause of Russians in their efforts to gain independence; he represented the Japanese of California in seeking the repeal of laws regarding the alien ownership of land, and for many years he was a member of the Board of Directors of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. He was President of the American Jewish Committee. The Committee was founded in 1906 "to protect infractions of the civil and religious rights of the Jews." Mr. Marshall was associated with the organization from its inception, and was President continuously from 1912. The tangible accomplishments of that Committee are only a partial gauge of how much he did in furthering its objects, for the influence he exerted in the thousands of letters he wrote, the State papers he helped to draft, his many appearances before Congressional committees and the innumerable conferences he held with statesmen of this and foreign governments can never be measured. The predominating influence in bringing about the abrogation of the treaty of 1832 with Russia in 1911 under President Taft is always credited to Mr. Marshall. This treaty was finally abrogated on the grounds that Russia was failing to observe its terms in regard to the recognition of American passports and was discriminating against Jews and Catholics who were American citizens. The abrogation has been characterized as "probably the most notable act ever undertaken by a great State in behalf of the Jewish people."

A less successful undertaking, but one for which he never ceased to struggle, was his championship of a liberal immigration policy. As an American-born child of immigrant parents, Mr. Marshall was always eager to keep the road open for other immigrants from abroad. He pleaded before many Congressional committees on the subject, and was Chairman of the New York State Immigration Commission of 1908. Until 1917 immigration restriction hinged largely upon the question of a literary test. It was said to have been chiefly through Mr. Marshall's efforts that bills containing literacy test provisions were vetoed by President Taft in February, 1913, and by President Wilson in January, 1915, and January, 1917, though in the latter case Congress passed the bill over the President's veto.

Mr. Marshall's most important contribution to the upholding of the rights of minorities was made at the Peace Conference in Paris in 1919, when he headed the Committee of Jewish Delegations as representative of the American Jewish Congress, and was instrumental in negotiating treaties with Poland, Rumania, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and other countries in which "the equal rights of racial, linguistic and religious minorities were laid down, made obligations of international concern and placed under the guaranty of the League of Nations." As the League was the guarantor of these treaties Mr. Marshall was always in favor of the United States joining it.

Another result of Mr. Marshall's championship of the cause of his race was Henry Ford's relinquishment of his anti-Semitic activities, which followed a series of conferences, subsequent to a suit by Mr. Marshall's partner, Mr. Untermyer, against Mr. Ford, on behalf of Herman Bernstein, the editor, between Mr. Marshall, Mr. Untermyer and Mr. Bernstein on one hand, and on the other hand by representatives of Mr. Ford, who ended by accepting all the conditions laid down by Messrs. Marshall and Untermyer.

In the cause of American progressive Judaism and Jewish education and the support of the religious institutions of Jewry Mr. Marshall played a prominent part. He was President of Temple Emanu-El, Chairman of the Board of Directors and of the Executive Committee of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, founder of the Jewish Protectory and Aid Society, Director of the Educational Alliance, Dropsie College, Philadelphia, and a member of the Council of Jewish Communal Institutions. He was a Doctor of Hebrew Laws in the Hebrew Union College of Cincinnati and a trustee of Syracuse University.

In connection with his work for Judaism Mr. Marshall took an important part in many campaigns to raise money. As Chairman of the American Jewish Relief Committee, the United Jewish Campaign, the United Building Fund Campaign and other drives he was instrumental in helping to raise more than $45,000,000 for charitable purposes.

Mr. Marshall was not greatly in sympathy with the Zionist movement in Palestine. He once described himself as "something better than a Zionist or a non-Zionist; I am a Jew." He was more sympathetic and more vigorous in his support of Jewish colonization in Russia than in Palestine, although he never hesitated to offer his services for the Jews in Palestine, as he did for Jews everywhere.

In January, 1927, Mr. Marshall became a member of the Palestine Survey Commission, which engaged experts to investigate conditions in Palestine and make reports to the commission, with a view to a conference between Zionists and non-Zionists to cooperate in acting upon the recommendations.

The fruition of these efforts, in which he was associated with many other prominent Jews, came in July of 1929, when the Jewish Agency came into being at Zurich, Switzerland, at a joint meeting of Zionists and non-Zionists.

The Agency represented the first concerted movement of Zionists and non-Zionists alike in support for the reclamation of Palestine, and in recognition of his work Mr. Marshall

LOUIS MARSHALL

". . . I pray thee, then;
Write me as one that loves his fellow-men".
The angel wrote, and vanished. The next night
It came again, with a great wakening light,
And showed the names whom love of God had blessed—
And, lo, Ben Adhem's name led all the rest!"—Hunt.

Mere words prove poor when I attempt to write about Louis Marshall. Few are the gifted mortals possessed of great knowledge who can do even fragmentary justice to the memory of this great soul who was summoned on-high at such a trying hour in Israel's history.

As I think of this great man, I first see him as "one that loved his fellow-men." Where ever individuals or minorities were dealt with unjustly, Louis Marshall gave of himself in their cause. To these without distinction of race or creed, he dedicated his power of brain and money.

As a Jew, Louis Marshall always thought in the terms of the Klal Yisroel—"Catholic Israel". Though by training, outlook, and identification, he was ever a Reform Jew, yet he did not permit party lines to disattach him from the larger household of Israel. Thus he was president of the leading Reform Jewish Congregation—Temple Emanu-El, and at the same time, was the chairman of the Board of Governors of the Jewish Theological Seminary—the Conservative Rabbinal School. It certainly takes a big man to hold such two offices at the same time!

And what I admired most in Marshall, the Jew, was his love for Judaism. He lived and preached the faith. He was not a racial or nationalist Jew. He was ever a religious Jew. To him, the Synagogue was ever the center of Jewish life and Judaism the faith which made civilization possible. Thus in season and out of season, he pleaded with Jews not to waste their time on all sorts of isms. He urged them to study Judaism. And what a Champion was he of our Judaism! We have few, very few like unto him in present day Jewry. In behalf of this Judaism and its people he faced kings and potentates! And these never dared to have refused Marshall a hearing.

Gone is this great lover of mankind.
Gone is this great lover of Judaism.
Gone is this Champion of Israel.

How soon will such another arise in Israel? What a pattern for Jewish youth to select and weave after their own loom of life!

God bless and hallow the memory of Louis Marshall.

WELCOME RABBI EISENDRATH

It is good to know that Rabbi Eisendrath and his "Rebitzen" are already at their post in Toronto. I am certain that the Torontonians will soon learn to know and appreciate them. Rabbi Eisendrath is one of the youngest of recent graduates of the Hebrew Union College. He is well equipped to carry on the splendid work begun by Rabbi Isserman. Lots of luck and good wishes to Rabbi and Mrs. Eisendrath.

COMMERCIALIZING THE SYNAGOGUE

"The season is on". Existing Congregations are now advertising the "Sale of seats". Mushroom congregations are on the other hand informing the world of its great cantors and would-be rabbis and self-styled rabbis. Committees on pews are trying to get the best prices for seats. Spiritual beggers will argue prices. And thus and thus, we treat the shul like unto a store, theatre or plant! Such was not the case with our fathers. They gave to the synagogue with their heart. They gave to it all the year around. They lived Judaism. They did not bargain with it. How depressing to the spiritual minded is the commercializing of the synagogue . . . What a Chilul Ha-Shem!

The Rise of David Levinsky

A Novel by Abraham Cahan

By arrangement with HARPER and BROTHERS, Copyright.

The name sounded remotely familiar to me. Had I seen it in some Yiddish paper? Had I heard it somewhere? The intellectual East Side was practically a foreign country to me, and I was proud of the fact. I knew something of its orthodox Talmudists, but scarcely anything of its modern men of letters, poets, thinkers, humorists, whether they wrote in Yiddish, in Hebrew, in Russian, or in English. If I took an occasional look at the socialist Yiddish daily it was chiefly to see what was going on in the Cloakmakers' Union. Otherwise I regarded everything that was written for the East Side with contempt, and "East Side writer" was synonymous with "greenhorn" and "tramp." Worse than that, it was identified in my mind with socialism, anarchism, and trade-unionism. It was something sinister, absurd and uncouth.

But Miss Tevkin was a beautiful girl nevertheless. So I pitied her for being the daughter of an East Side writer.

The tennis game did not last long. Miss Tevkin and her companion soon went indoors. I went out for a stroll by myself. I was thinking of my journey to Tannersville the next morning. The enforced loss of time chafed me. Of the strong impression which the tall girl had produced on me not a trace seemed to have been left. She bothered me no more than any other pretty girl I might have recently come across. Young women with strikingly interesting faces and figures were not rare in New York.

I had not been walking five minutes when I impatiently returned to the hotel to consult the time-tables.

CHAPTER II

I was chatting with Riversman, the lessee of the hotel, across the counter that separated part of his office from the lobby. As I have said, I had known him for many years. He had formerly been in the insurance business, and he had at one time acted as my insurance broker. He was a Talmudist, and well versed in modern Hebrew literature, to boot. He advised me concerning trains to Tannersville, and as we passed to the hotel business and mutual acquaintances.

Presently Miss Tevkin, apparently on her way from her room, paused at the counter, by my side, to leave her key. She was dressed for dinner, although it was not yet half past 4 o'clock and the great Saturday-evening repast, which train after train was bringing husbands and other "week-enders" from the mountains, was usually a very late affair.

The dress she now wore was a light gown of navy blue trimmed with white. The change of attire seemed to have produced a partial change in her personality. She was interesting in a new way, I thought.

"Going to enjoy the fresh air?" Riversman asked her, gallantly.

"Ye-es," she answered, pleasantly, "it's glorious outside." And she vanished.

"Pretty girl," I remarked.

"One of your two-week guests, I suppose," I said, with studied indifference.

"Yes. She is a stenographer," thereupon he named a well-known lawyer, a man prominent in the affairs of the Jewish community, as her employer. "It was an admirer of her father who got the job for her."

From what followed I learned that Miss Tevkin's father had once been a Hebrew poet and that he was no other than the hero of the romance of which Naphtali had told me a few months before I left my native place to go to America, and that her mother was the heroine of that romance. In other words, her mother was the once celebrated beauty, the daughter of the famous Hebrew writer (long since deceased), Doctor Rachaeless of Odessa.

"It was her father, then who wrote those love-letters!" I exclaimed, excitedly. "And it was about her mother that he wrote them! Somebody told me on the veranda that her name was Miss Terkin. I did think the name sounded familiar, but I could not locate it."

The discovery stirred me inordinately. I was palpitating with reminiscent interest and with a novel interest in the beautiful girl who had just stood by my side.

At my request Riversman, followed by myself, sought her out on the front porch and introduced me to her as "a great admirer of your father's poetry."

Seated beside her was a bald-headed man with a lone wisp of hair directly over his forehead whom the hotelkeeper introduced as "Mr. Shapiro, a counselor," and who by his manner of greeting me showed that he was fully aware of my financial standing.

The old romance of the Hebrew poet and his present wife, and more especially the fact that I had been thrilled by it in Antomir, threw a halo of ineffable fascination around their beautiful daughter.

"So you are a daughter of the great Hebrew poet," I said in English.

"It's awfully kind of you to speak like that," she returned.

"Mr. Levinsky is known for his literary tastes, you know," Shapiro put in.

"I wish I deserved the compliment," I rejoined. "Unfortunately, I don't. I am glad I find time to read the newspapers."

"The newspapers are life," observed Miss Tevkin, "and life is the source of literature, or should be."

"Or should be!" Shapiro mocked her, fondly. "Is that a dig at the popular novels?" And in an aside to me, "Miss Tevkin has no use for them, you know."

She smiled.

"Still worshiping at the shrine of Ibsen?" he asked her.

"More than ever!"—she replied, gaily.

"I admire your loyalty, though I regret to say that I am still unable to share your taste."

"It isn't a matter of taste," she returned. "It depends on what one is looking for in a play or a novel."

She smiled with the air of one abstaining from a fruitless discussion.

"She's a blue-stocking," I said to myself. "Women of this kind are usually doomed to be old maids." And yet she drew me with a magnetic force that seemed to be beyond my power of resistance.

It was evident that she enjoyed the discussion and the fact that it was merely a pretext for the lawyer to feast his eyes on her.

I wondered why a bald-headed man with a lone tuft of hair did not repel her.

A younger brother of Shapiro's, a real-estate broker, joined us. He also was bald-headed, but his baldness formed a smaller patch than the lawyer's.

The two brothers did most of the talking and among other things, they informed Miss Tevkin and myself that they were graduates of the City Colleges. With a great display of reading and repeatedly interrupting each other they took up the cudgels for the "good old school." I soon discovered, however, that their range was limited to a small number of authors, whose names they uttered with great gusto and to whom they returned again and again. These were Victor Hugo, Dumas, Dickens, Thackeray, George Eliot, Coleridge, Edgar Poe, and one or two others. If the lawyer added a new name, like Walter Pater, to his list, the real-estate man would hasten to trot out De Quincey, for example. For the rest they would parade a whole array of writers rather than refer to any one of them in particular. The more they fulminated and fumed and bullied Miss Tevkin the firmer grew my conviction that they had scarcely read the books for which they seemed to be ready to lay down their lives.

Miss Tevkin, however, took them seriously. She followed them with the air of a "good girl" listening to a lecture by her mother or teacher.

"I don't agree with you at all," she would say, weakly, from time to time, and resume listening with charming resignation.

The noise made by the two brothers attracted several other boarders. One of these was a slovenly-looking man of forty-five who spoke remarkably good English with a very bad accent (far worse than mine). That he was a Talmudic scholar was written all over his face. By profession he was a photographer. His name was Mendelson. He took a hand in our discussion, and it at once became apparent that he had read more and knew more than the baldheaded brothers. He was overflowing with withering sarcasm and easily sneered them into silence.

Miss Tevkin was happy. But the slovenly boarder proved to be one of those people who know what they do not want rather than what they do. And so he proceeded, in a spirit of chivalrous banter, to make game of her literary gods as well.

"You don't really mean to tell us that you enjoy an Ibsen play?" he demanded. "Why, you are too full of life for that."

"But that's just what the Ibsen plays are—full of life," she answered. "If you're bored by them it's because you're probably looking for stories, for 'action.' But art is something more significant than that. There is moral force and beauty in Ibsen which one misses in the old masters."

"That's exactly what the ministers of the gospel or the up-to-date rabbis are always talking about—moral force, moral beauty, and moral clam-chowder," Mendelson retorted.

The real-estate man uttered a chuckle.

"Would you turn the theater into a church or a reform synagogue?" the photographer continued. "People go to see a play because they want to enjoy themselves, not because they feel that their morals need damning."

"But in good literature the moral is not preached as a sermon," Miss Tevkin replied. "It naturally follows from the life it presents. Anyhow, the other kind of literature is mere froth. You read page after page and there doesn't seem to be any substance to it." She said it plaintively, as though apologizing for holding views of this kind.

"Is that the way you feel about Thackeray and Dickens too?" I ventured.

"I do," she answered, in the same doleful tone.

She went on to develop her argument. We did not interrupt her, the two brothers, the photographer, and myself listening to her with admiring glances that had more to do with her beautiful face and the music of her soft, girlish voice than with what she was saying. There was a congealed sneer on the photographer's face as he followed her plea, but it was full of the magic of her presence.

"You're a silly child," his countenance seemed to say. "But I could eat you, all the same."

She dwelt on the virtues of Ibsen, Strindberg, Knut Hamsen, Hauptmann, and a number of others, mostly names I did not recollect ever having heard before, and she often used the word "decadent," which she pronounced in the French way and which I did not then understand. Now and then she would quote some critic, or some remark heard from a friend or from her father, and once she dwelt on an argument of her oldest brother, who seemed to be well versed in Russian literature and to have clear-cut opinions on literature in general. She spoke with an even-voiced fluency, with a charming gift of language. Words came readily, pleasantly from her pretty lips. It was evident, too, that she was thoroughly familiar with the many authors whose praises she was sounding. Yet I could not help feeling that she had not much to say. The opinions she voiced were manifestly not her own, as though she was reciting a well-mastered lesson. And I was glad of it. "She's merely a girl, after all," I thought, fondly. "She's the sweetest thing I ever knew, and her father is the man who wrote those love-letters, and her mother is the celebrated beauty with whom he was in love."

Whether the views she set forth were her own or somebody else's, I could see that she relished uttering them. Also, that she relished the euphony and felicity of her phrasing, which was certainly her own. Whether she spoke from conviction or not, one thing seemed undisputable: the atmosphere surrounding the books and authors she named had a genuine fascination for her. There was a naive sincerity in her rhetoric, and her delivery and gestures had a rhythm that seemed to be akin to the rhythm of her movements in the tennis-court.

Miss Lazar passed by us, giving me a smiling look, which seemed to say, "I knew you would sooner or later be in her company." I felt myself blushing. "To-morrow I'll be in Tannersville and all this nonsense will be over," I said to myself.

The long-faced, short girl with whom Miss Tevkin had played tennis emerged from the lobby door and was introduced to me as Miss Siegel. As I soon gathered from a bit of pleasantry by the lawyer, she was a school-teacher.

At Miss Tevkin's suggestion we all went to see the crowd waiting for the last husband train."

As we rose to go I made a point of asking Miss Tevkin for the name of the best Ibsen play, my object being to be by her side on our walk down to the village. The photographer hastened to answer my question, thus occupying the place on the other side of her.

We were crossing the sloping lawn, Miss Tevkin on a narrow flagged walk, while we were trotting along through the grass on either side of her, with the other three of our group bringing up the rear. Presently, as we reached the main sidewalk, we were held up by Auntie Yetta, who was aparently returning from one of the cottages across the road.

"Is this the one you are after?" she demanded of me, with a wink in the direction of Miss Tevkin. And, looking her over, "You do know a good thing when you see it." Then to her: "Hold on to him, young lady. Hold on tight. Mr. Levinsky is said to be worth a million, you know."

"She's always joking," I said, awkwardly, as we resumed our walk.

Miss Tevkin made no answer, but I felt that Auntie Yetta's joke had made a disagreeable impression on her. I sought to efface it by a humorous sketch of Auntie Yetta, and seemed to be successful.

The village was astir. The great "husband train," the last and longest of the day, was due in about ten minutes. Groups of women and children in gala dress were emerging from the various boarding houses, feeding the main human stream. Some boarders were out to meet the train, others were on their way to the post-office for letters. A sunset of pale gold hung broodingly over the mountains. Miss Tevkin's voice seemed to have something to do with it.

Presently we reached the crowd at the station. The train was late. The children were getting restless. At last it arrived, the first of two sections, with a few minutes' headway between them. There was a jam and a babel of voices. Interminable strings of passengers, travel-worn, begrimed, their eyes searching the throng, came dribbling out of the cars with tantalising slowness. Men in livery caps were chanting the names of their respective boardinghouses. Passengers were shouting the pet names of their wives or children; women and children were calling to their newly arrived husbands and fathers, some gaily, others shrieking, as though the train were on fire. There were a large number of handsome, well-groomed women in expensive dresses and diamonds, and some of these were being kissed by puny, but successful-looking, men. "They married them for their money," I said to myself. An absurd-looking shirt-waist-manufacturer of my acquaintance, a man with the face of a squirrel, swooped down upon a large young matron of dazzling animal beauty who had come in an automobile. He introduced me to her, with a beaming air of triumph. "I can afford a machine and a beautiful wife," his radiant squirrel-face seemed to say. He was parading the fact that this tempting female had married him in spite of his ugliness. He was mutely boasting as much of his own homeliness as of her coarse beauty.

Prosperity was picking the cream of the "bride market" for her favorite sons. I thought of Lenox Avenue, a great, broad thoroughfare up-town that had almost suddenly begun to swarm with good-looking and flashily gowned brides of Ghetto upstarts, like a meadow bursting into bloom in spring.

"And how about your own case?" a voice retorted within me. "Could you get a girl like Fanny if it were not for your money? Ah, but I'm a good-looking chap myself and not as ignorant as most of the other fellows who have succeeded," I answered, inwardly. "Yes, and I am entitled to a better girl than Fanny, too." And I became conscious of Miss Tevkin's presence by my side.

Conversation with the poet's daughter was practically monopolized by the misanthropic photgrapher. I was seized with a desire to dislodge him. I was determined to break into the conversation and to try to eclipse him. With a fast-hearting heart I began:

"What an array of beautiful women! Present company"—with a bow to Miss Tevkin and her long-faced chum—"not excepted of course. Far from it."

The two girls smiled.

"Why! Why! Whence this sudden fit of galantry?" asked the photographer, his sneer and the rasping Yiddish enunciation with which he spoke English filling me with hate.

"Come, Mr. Mendelson," I answered, "it's about time you cast off your grouch. "Look! The sky is so beautiful, the mountains so majestic. Cheer up, old man."

The real-estate man burst into a laugh. The two girls smiled, looking me over curiously. I hastened to follow up my advantage.

"One does get into a peculiar mood on an evening like this," I pursued. "The air is so divine and the people are so happy."

"That's what we all come to the mountains for," the photographer contorted.

Ignoring his remark, I resumed: "It may seem a contradiction of terms, but these family reunions, these shouts of welcome, are so thrilling it makes one feel as if there was something pathetic in them."

"Pathetic?" the bald-headed real-estate man asked in surprise.

"Mr. Levinsky is in a pathetic mood, don't you know," the photographer cut in.

"Yes, pathetic," I defied him. "What pathos has nothing to do with grouch, has it?" I asked, addressing myself to the girls.

"Why, no," Miss Siegel replied with a perfunctory smile. "Still, I should rather see people meet than part. It's heartbreaking to watch a train move out of a station, with those white handkerchiefs waving, and getting smaller, smaler. Oh, those handkerchiefs!"

It was practically the first remark I had heard from her. It produced a stronger impression on my mind than all Miss Tevkin had said. Nevertheless, I felt that I should much rather listen to Miss Tevkin.

"Of course, of course," I said. "Leave-taking is a very touching scene to witness. But still, when people meet again after a considerable separation, it's also touching. Don't you think so?"

"Yes, I know what you mean," Miss Siegel assented, somewhat aloofly.

"Yes, but they cry, all the same. There are tears," I urged.

"It had no idea you were such a cry-baby, Mr. Levinsky," the photographer said. "Perhaps you'll feel better when you've had dinner. But I thought you said this weather made you happy."

"It simply means that at the bottom of our hearts we Jews are a sad people," Mis Tevkin interceded. "There is a broad streak of tragedy in our psychology. It's the result of many centuries of persecution and homelessness. Gentiles take life more easily than we do. My father has a beautiful poem on the theme. But then the Russians are even more melancholy than we are. Russian literature is full of it. My oldest brother, who is a great stickler for everything Russian, is always speaking about it."

Presently she and her long-faced chum were hailed by a group of young men and women, and, excusing themselves to us, they ran over to join them. I felt like a man sipping at a glass of wine when the glass is suddenly seized from his hand.

The Crane Corwith sink in whose manufacture all manifestations of the commonplace were shunned. And which brings new fields of utility within the range of economy

To serve comfort and beauty

In no room of a modern house are thought and taste so amply repaid as in the arrangement and equipment of the kitchen. For there, thought yields convenience . . . taste, pleasant surroundings to lighten the burdens of routine work.

And because changes cannot be easily made, and replacements are expensive, economy over a long period of time must be taken into consideration.

It is seldom one has the opportunity this Crane Corwith sink offers of serving all these diverse ends at one time. But from a view-point of practical use it presents every convenience.

On its ample double drainboard can be performed countless tasks that have required running from sink to kitchen table.

In its 8" deep, oversized well there is no lack of room for dishwashing, and no need for a dishpan either. At touch a lever automatically stops the drain and holds washing water in the well.

A hose and spray make vegetable washing and dish rinsing as easy as they make it effective.

To keep it spotlessly clean requires a minimum of effort. Its ware is enameled iron, and can be had in regular or stainless style. The fittings are chromium plated, impervious to scratches and tarnish.

Best of all, these conveniences have been molded by Crane designers into a fixture of distinction.

From the apron all monotony is banished by a series of sculptural, set-back planes. Grace is added by placing the gleaming fittings in a sloping recess. But to learn all the advantages a Corwith sink will bring to your kitchen, talk to your plumbing contractor. He can speak with authority on its utility, and on the lasting excellence of the material that it is made from.

Every Friday

At present writing stronger guards patrol Jerusalem, the Zionist Executive Committee there is making plans for the reconstruction of the towns and villages which suffered damage in the recent riots, and at the end of this month the Palestine Commission of Inquiry is to proceed to the Holy Land "to inquire into the immediate causes which led to the recent outbreak and make recommendations regarding the steps necessary to avoid a recurrence." Its personnel consists of Sir Walter Shaw, the late Chief Justice of the Straits Settlement, as president or chairman, and Sir Henry Betterton, M.P., Conservative; R. Hopkin Morris, M. P., Independent Liberal; and Henry Snell, M.P., Labor Party.

Besides the question of how long the Jews in Palestine will be safe from further attacks the thought uppermost in the minds of those interested in the Palestine situation concerns the Palestine Mandate.

When the Colonial Office announced the appointment of Sir Walter Shaw on September 3rd., it went on to deny categorically all reports that the British Government contemplated the abandonment of the Palestine Mandate or any modification of the policy laid down in the Balfour Declaration. The statement also said that after the inquiry into the outbreak the whole question of future policy in Palestine, within the terms of the Mandate, will be the subject of earnest consideration. On September 6th., Arthur Henderson, British Foreign Minister, declared before the League of Nations session that there is no idea of reconsidering the British tenure of the Mandate for Palestine. These are official assurances to the Zionists and official warnings to the Arabs.

It must be recognized, however, that there is a press in England divided on the subject of the Mandate and opinion against British tenure of the Mandate as well as for it. The "Manchester Guardian" says that there can be no change in British policy with regard to the Jewish National Home which is here to stay regardless of the Arabs. The "Daily Express" urges the withdrawal of the Mandate, pointing out the cost of it all to the English taxpayer. The "Daily Telegraph" suggests the re-establishment of a British gendarmerie to protect the lives of the Palestine populace. The "Morning Post" says the obligations of the Mandate must be fulfilled. The "New Statesman," an influential weekly, says in part: "The Balfour Declaration cannot be regarded as eternal as it was not submitted either to Parliament or the British electorate. Accepting the obligation Lord Balfour forced on Britain was a generous impulse but a time limit or modification is necessary as Britain cannot eternally support a minority merely because one of our ministers once, without consulting us, pledged us to a particular policy. We cannot suddenly repudiate our responsibilities but the time has come to issue a warning that ten or twenty years hence the Jews must prepare to manage their own affairs. No imperial or British economic interests are involved in Palestine. The historical Jewish claims are flimsy. It is unjust to use British soldiers and machine guns, against an indigenous race. It is impossible permanently to support with rifles the role required of us by Zionist propagandists. If the Jews really want a National Home in Palestine they must buy it with their own money, not British money, still less with British blood."

The "Daily Mail" demands that Great Britain give up the Palestine Mandate in an article signed by its publisher, Viscount Rothermere, under the title "Hand Back the Mandates or the Middle East May Be Our Ruin." This article enumerates the economic and political disadvantages of holding the Mandate and urges Great Britain to "get away from the hornet's nest while there is yet time." Other newspapers of Lord Rothermere urge Britain to suppress the disorders in Palestine and then repudiate the Mandate and wash its hands of all responsibility in the Holy Land. Thus the Zionists must bear in mind that, while such an influential paper as the "London Times" says "the policy in Palestine stands quite unaffected by any attempt of either race to oust or dominate the other and the continuous execution of the present policy is necessary to British honour," there are papers and orators in disagreement with this view. To them Great Britain appears a foolish altruist taking on heavy burdens under the Mandate and with little or nothing to gain thereby. Therefore they see the whole undertaking as a mad adventure and are saying so loudly. Any desire to see English public opinion not as it might be but as it actually is will compell the Zionists to take this into account.

As to the future, Dr. Chaim Weizmann, president of the Jewish Agency and of the Zionist Organization of the World, said at Geneva September 8, that a change of the British government's policy toward the establishment of the Jewish National Home in Palestine should now be expected. What did he mean? Is there a note of uncertainty in his voice when he says: "Our present expectations of the British Government will be that it keeps to the spirit and letter of the Mandate"? He goes on to say: "Interviews with Prime Minister MacDonald and Viscount Cecil convinced me that the British Government maintains a sympathetic attitude but the results and findings of the Commission of Inquiry must first be awaited."

In addition to the necessity of realizing that others besides themselves are interested in what happens in Palestine and that events there are being interpreted from the Arab point of view and the English point of view as well as from that of the Jews, the Zionists must understand that even in anguish they must exercise restraint. In their grief over the Arab massacres and outrages many allowed themselves to rush by orators and print into declarations they should not have made, perhaps. Mayb protest meetings and lines of march are bad for a cause. It may be possible to jeopardize a cause by too much talk and to stir a mild opposition into a violent antagonism thereby. Certainly in a province like Ontario where Anti-Semitism is recognized as part of the atmosphere the Zionists should have a committee empowered to use freely gags, muzzle- and chloroform. The Zionists must not close their eyes and stuff their ears against angles on the Palestine situation other than the angles they desire to see and hear about. And above all they have got to learn that silence as well as thunder can reverberate.

was elected chairman of the council of the Agency.

One of his outside interests was in the cause of forest preservation. For more than twenty years he was President of the New York State College of Forestry.

Mr. Marshall was a frequent lecturer before learned and philanthropic societies. For many years he was Chairman of the Committee on the Amendment of Law of the Bar Association of New York City; a member of the American Law Institute, American Bar Association, as well as the New York State and New York County Bar Associations; a life member of the Zoological Society, Botanical Garden, American Museum of Natural History, New York Historical Society, the Academy of Sciences and an honorary member of Phi Beta Kappa. The clubs he belonged to were the Lotos, Bankers and Republican.

On May 6, 1895, Mr. Marshall married Miss Frances Lowenstein of New York. She died in May, 1916. Four children survive: James, a lawyer, who is connected with the firm of Guggenheimer, Untermyer & Marshall; Ruth, now Mrs. Jacob Billikopf of Philadelphia; Robert and George.

Louis Marshall Dies Abroad in 73rd Year

Louis Marshall, one of the foremost American lawyers and notable for his leadership in many Jewish fields, died at Zurich, Switzerland September 11. He had been ill since August 23 when, stricken suddenly, he underwent the first of two operations for abscess of the pancreas. He was in his seventy-third year.

Throughout his illness Mr. Marshall had fought bravely and uncomplainingly, but it became apparent when blood transfusions failed to rally his ebbing strength, that he was maintaining life only by his indomitable will. Even that yielded in the end and death came to him at 3 o'clock.

The body taken to New York City for burial. At the bedside when the lawyer died were his son, James Marshall, of New York; his sister, Mrs. Abraham Rosenberg of Philadelphia; his brother-in-law, Dr. Judah L. Magnes, chancellor of the Hebrew University at Jerusalem, and his wife; and the Rev. Dr. H. G. Enelow of Temple Emanu-El in New York City.

Two physicians also were at the bedside. They were Mr. Clairmont, who performed the operations, and Dr. Lihman, of New York. The philanthropist's son reached here less than a week ago, having made a quick trip from New York when it became evident that his father's illness was extremely serious.

Messages of sympathy came from many parts of the world. Presidena Hoover was among the first to cable his sorrow at the passing of Mr. Marshall. Messages from Germany, France, Great Britain and Holland followed closely.

Leaders in the Zionist movement sent messages of condolence. Many of the Zionists who cabled their regret were delegates to the sixteenth Zionist Congress in Zurich. During the sessions of the congress, Mr. Marshall was elected chairman of the Jewish Agency Council for Uniting Zionists and non-Zionists in the task of making Palestine the Jewish homeland.

These leaders had followed closely Mr. Marshall's determined effort to win back his health. When the attending physicians told Mr. Marshall that the only hope of saving his life was through an operation he did not hesitate a moment.

He sent a request to Dr. Clairmont, an eminent Swiss surgeon, asking him to perform the operation. Dr. Clairmont reached Zurich more than a month ago and operated. It was necessary almost immediately after the operation to resort to transfusion of blood.

Mr. Marshall, however, did not rally satisfactorily. Gradually losing strength, Mr. Marshall, it was disclosed today, was at the point of death last week. The second operation, undertaken in the emergency, seemed more satisfactory than the first.

The period of gain, was short. The patient's circulation suddenly became very poor. Serious heart weakness developed concurrently with the subnormal circulatory condition and the physicians knew that the end was only a matter of hours. The relatives and friends of Mr. Marshall were apprised of his death in a transatlantic telephone call. All funeral arrangements were in the hands of those who were in attendance upon him in Zurich. Word of his death was dispatched to his son Robert, who has been in the United States Forestry Service in Alaska near the Arctic Circle, and is now on his way here. Mr. Marshall's third son, George, is in New York.

The news was also telephoned to the attorney's son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Billikopf, at Mr. Marshall's camp at Saranac Lake. Mr. Billikopf arrived on the Majestic from Europe on Tuesday, having left Zurich with the assurance of the physicians that Mr. Marshall was making progress after his operation and that they were gratified with his condition. It was after Mr. Billikopf's departure that a second operation was found necessary, following which Mr. Marshall steadily weakened.

THE HIGHLANDS OF ONTARIO ARE AT THEIR BEST IN SEPTEMBER

You'll like the hazy warmth of September days in the Highlands. You'll like the breath of pine and cedar that is heavy on the air. Everything you do will seem just right. All the Summer sports are in full swing—wonderful golf and tennis—boating—hiking—riding. You can't choose a better tonic than a few Autumn weeks in Ontario's Lakelands. There is excellent accommodation at any of the resort territories—Muskoka Lakes, Lake of Bays, Kawartha Lakes or Georgian Bay. Any Agent of Canadian National Railways will gladly help you make your choice, make reservations, etc.

AUTUMN IS CANADA'S TRAVEL-TIME

Travel takes on new joys in Autumn. The days are not too warm. The nights are refreshingly cool. Scenery looks different too. Trees and foliage are lavish with brilliant color. Every hillside is a riot of reds, yellows, greens and browns.

Now is a good time to see the Maritimes and Quebec . . . or the Highlands of Ontario . . . or Jasper National Park and the Pacific Coast. Take your clubs along—you'll meet ideal golfing weather wherever you go.

Detailed information will be gladly supplied by any Agent of Canadian National Railways.

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming, and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

JEWS DOING WELL ON FARMS IN U. S.

The number of Jewish farmers in the United States is increasing and their holdings now aggregate about 1,000,000 acres, valued at more than $175,000,000, including real estate and personal property, according to Gabriel Davidson, general manager of the Jewish Agricultural Society.

At a period when the trend is away from the farm, Jews in the United States are settling there in increasing numbers and the proportion of those who give up farming is decreasing, Mr. Davidson said.

"An interesting feature of this situation," he continued, "is that Jews, as a race, have no background of agricultural experience, since in European countries they were debarred from owning land, until comparatively recent years. In taking up farming they are confronted with entirely new conditions and are not so well fitted as other races to establish themselves on the soil.

"Conservative estimates place the number of farms worked by Jews in this country at between 16,000 and 20,000, and the total Jewish population on the farms at from 80,000 to 110,000," he added.

The Jewish Agricultural Society is performing a unique service in advising prospective farm owners, providing agricultural training, giving financial advice and making loans to applicants whose security is not good enough to satisfy public financing agencies," Mr. Davidson said.

The society's farm employment department has obtained employment for 16,371 Jewish young men since 1908, according to the last annual report. Last year it placed 390 men as farm workers. During the past 11 years the department has given advice and guidance to 11,384 Jewish men and women desiring to buy farms. Farms were found for 1,927 families, of whom 486 received loans to help finance their purchases. Through this department the society tries to protect prospective Jewish farm owners from the activities of dishonest farm agents.

The agricultural experts of the society's extension department visited 2,393 Jewish farmers during 1928 and held 138 meetings, demonstrations, field days and extension schools. Through this system of itinerant instruction the farmers received up-to-date information in various branches of farming. In addition, advice and aid were given to 1,881 farmers who sought individual consultation.

The extension department also gave scholarships to the sons and daughters of Jewish farmers at the agricultural colleges in five states and made loans to students in the Connecticut and Massachusetts agricultural colleges.

For the first time the society awarded a series of prizes in 1928 for outstanding achievement in various fields of agriculture and for the greatest contributions to the family farmsteads by farm women, girls and boys. The society also maintains a purchasing service bureau; an agricultural night school, in which instruction is supplemented by an inspection tour of successfully operated farms; publishes agricultural textbooks and leaflets and a magazine, the Jewish Farmer, and conducts social welfare activities. A notable feature of the organization, Mr. Davidson said, is that it "sets both the principal and interest of its endowment fund to work."

LOUIS MARSHALL

We note with profoundest grief the premature passing of Louis Marshall, at Zurich, Switzerland. "A Prince has fallen in Israel." A stalwart champion of the Jewish people is no more; a courageous and challenging voice is stilled. Louis Marshall had enemies, but his foes attested to his greatness. His friends and followers were unnumbered. His strivings for Jewish solidatory formed the ruling passion of his life. The part he played in the formation of the Jewish Agency, perhaps his last great activity, will remain forever a monument to his name. American Jewry, nay World Jewry, Humanity itself has suffered an irretrievable loss.

News of Palestine

The evacuation by the Jews from the danger zones created a new problem in Jerusalem—that of housing the refugees who have rushed to the heart of the city from the suburbs, and outlying districts, as well as from the old city. Rooms in the safer areas are at a premium.

Reports are current that Syrian Arabs are using every means available for encouraging and arousing the Arabs of Palestine to revolt against the British Government. Not only are inciting articles against Great Britain published in Syrian newspapers, but also representatives are being sent to Palestine for the same purpose.

Plans for reconstruction of the towns and villages which suffered damage in the Arab-Jewish fighting are going forward.

The Zionist Executive Committee is forming an advisory committee for the reconstruction work composed of one representative each of the National Council of Palestine Jews, the Labor Federation, the Merchants' Association and the Anglo-Palestine Company.

A committee under the chairmanship of Rabbi Meyer Berlin, president of the Mizrachi organization, and a member of the Zionist Executive is in charge of relief.

The entire relief work is being carried on under the supervision of the Zionist executive, acting as the Jewish agency. Colonel Frederick H. Kisch is in charge of political matters and I. Sprinzak of public information. Gerson Agornsky has been acting during the emergency period as director of information.

The legal work, such as the presentation of claims and the preparation of Jewish places for the inquiry commission will be in charge of Harry Sacher, member of the Jerusalem Executive, who will arrive during the week.

The Jerusalem lodge of Bnai Brith offered to the Zionist Executive here the moral and financial help of the thousand lodges of the order throughout the world.

The curfew has begun to be lifted in Haifa, where traffic in the streets is allowed until 9 p. m. Cafés and shops are permitted to keep open until 8.

The government proposed to allow movement in the streets until 10 o'clock. The Moslems suggested 9 o'clock and the Jews did not wish the curfew lifted at all.

The Colonial Office states that the membership of the Palestine Commission under the chairmanship of Sir Walter Shaw, will be Sir Henry Betterton, M. P., Conservative; R. Hopkin Morris, M. P., Independent Liberal, and Henry Snell, M. P. Labor Party. The commission is expected to go to Palestine at the end of this month.

PALESTINE CLAIMS

Claims for losses suffered during the recent rioting and attacks by Arabs in Palestine must be filed within one month, according to an official notice forwarded to the State Department by Paul Knabenshue, American Consul General at Jerusalem.

Notice published in the Official Gazette, the Consul General said, specifies that claims in regard to destruction of, or damage to property or as to a loss of life must be made within a month from the occurrence of the loss or injury and should be addressed to A. Abramson, Commissioner of Lands, Government Offices, Jerusalem.

1. Name of town, village or colony in which loss suffered.
2. Name of section or haret of town or village or colony.
3. Name of street.
4. Name of applicant in full.
5. Particulars of property destroyed or damaged or injury suffered.

Value of property in detail.

7. Date of destruction or damage to property or injury suffered.

The notice further stated that compensation is payable only where a collective fine is levied.

The Consul General suggested that American citizens who have sustained losses as a consequence of the disturbances may deem it desirable to obtain the services of local attorneys in connection with the preparation of their claims to the commissioner.

The Department of State will supply such American citizens with a list of attorneys in Jerusalem, Jaffa, Telaviv or Haifa whom the department believes to be reputable attorneys.
